The Jewel House Dec 19 2019 The #1 New York Times–bestselling author of A Discovery of Witchese examines the real-life history of the scientific community of Elizabethan London. Travel to the streets, shops, back alleys, and gardens of Elizabethan London, where a boisterous and diverse group of men and women shared a keen interest in the study of nature. These assorted merchants, gardeners, barber-surgeons, midwives, instrument makers, mathematics teachers, engineers, alchemists, and other experimenters formed a patchwork scientific community whose practices set the stage for the Scientific Revolution. While Francis Bacon has been widely regarded as the father of modern science, scores of his London contemporaries also deserve a share in this distinction. It was their collaborative, yet often contentious, ethos that helped to develop the ideals of modern scientific research. The book examines six particularly fascinating episodes of scientific inquiry and dispute in sixteenth-century London, bringing to life the individuals involved and the challenges they faced. These men and women experimented and invented, argued and competed, waged wars in the press, and struggled to understand the complexities of the natural world. Together their stories illuminate the blind alleys and surprising twists and turns taken as medieval philosophy gave way to the empirical, experimental culture that became a hallmark of the Scientific Revolution. "Elegant and erudite." –Anthony Grafton, American Scientist "A truly wonderful book, deeply researched, full of original material, and exhilarating to read." –John Carey, Sunday Times "Widely accessible." –Ian Archer, Oxford University "Vivid, compelling, and panoramic, this revelatory work will force us to revise everything we thought we knew about Renaissance science." –Adrian Johns, author of The Nature Book

Improving the Utility of the Tower of London Jan 24 2023 Abstract: The utility of a popular test of planning, the Tower of London (TOL), was improved by addressing its limitations. The ceiling effect of the most commonly used version was removed by modifying the materials to increase item difficulty. To improve reliability, psychometric criteria were used to select the test items. An initial pool of 33 problems was administered to 65 children (M = 6.92 years, SD = 1.08) and 73 adults (M = 43.62 years, SD = 19.96) to derive 11 items of graded difficulty and maximal item discrimination. When these items were administered to 33 undergraduates (M = 26.10 years, SD = 9.79), the single item which did not retain its difficulty level was removed. Although low, the internal consistency in this sample (split-half  $r = .39$ ) was higher than that of the TOL (Cronbach's  $\alpha = .30$ ) which was administered to 23 undergraduates (M = 25.61 years, SD = 8.69). -- Normative data for the modified version (the TOL4) were collected for a total of 447 people aged between 5 and 53 years. The split-half reliability in this sample was acceptable ( $r = .60$ ), as was the 1-month test-retest reliability of .71 for a sample of 61 adults and children (M = 26.08 years, SD = 13.98). Although there was a slight practice effect,  $F(1,60) = 6.80$ ,  $p = .01$ , the improvement was not clinically important (Mtime1 = 20.59, SD = 4.34; Mtime2 = 21.49, SD = 3.16). -- The construct validity of the total score as a measure of planning was demonstrated in three ways. First, the developmental improvement in the normative sample was consistent with both cognitive theory and previous research with the TOL. Second, in a sample of 73 undergraduates (M = 24.77 years, SD = 8.39) the total score correlated with measures of planning (Tinkertoy Test,  $r = .28$ ,  $p$
